EDITORIAL

Dr. Alexander Wickett
(PHD, OBE, KGB, WWE, YOLO)
Professor of Shredology at Gnarvard University.

Findings from my recent study on weather patterns in the Kootenays show that the 2024/25 winter season is going to be a straight up banger. We can expect an annual snowfall of 420m, with an average snowdepth 69m at 666m altitude. Pressure system analysis indicate that we can expect cold nights with heavy snowfall and sunny temperate days, perfect for getting pitted with your pals on your favourite rip-stick.

It is widely believed in Nelson that there is an inverse relationship between seasonal winter precipitation and the presence of insects in the warmer months preceding. In previous years we witnessed increased levels of cedar bugs coinciding with lower precipitation. Inversely this summer passed we observed a prominent domination of the wasp population, leading us to conclude that this winter is going to be titties deep blower pow-pow.

A recent visit to my caucasian Shaman and spiritual life coach 'Rainbow' revealed that I just have to believe and manifest the snow, and the universe will deliver, barring that mercury doesn't go into retrograde of course!

Market wise, Nelson grifters have seen an unprecedented uptick in sales of clapped out tacomas, outbacks and grand caravans; indicating the community feels it coming. Expect to see a caravan or two full of Aussie tourists stuck on the Whitewater access road, dampening the stoke for everyone. Bring a tow rope to avoid shred delays.

Ultimately my assessment is you can expect this season's forecast to remain 'snowy with a high chance of shredding the gnar'. So strap in folks, we're in for a doozy on the mountain. Don't forget; cool guys wear helmets!
